THE NINE STEPS TO FENG SHUI® LIFE AREAS

Each of these areas has been assigned an element, a number, a season and a set of colors. We can use this information to choose "cures" or enhancements in the home or office that relate to the Life Area that we wish to improve. In order to find out where the Life Areas are located in your building, draw a tic-tac-toe grid over the floor plan of your home or office. You can do this by measuring the overall width and length and then dividing those measurements by three and marking the spots. Then draw lines to join the dots. If your building is square you will end up with nine smaller squares of equal size. If it is rectangular, you will have nine small rectangles of equal size. If your building is "L" or "C" shaped, some of the areas may be outside of the floor plan.

WHEN YOU ARE READY TO GO BEYOND THE FREE FENG SHUI BAGUA MAP, PLEASE CONSIDER OUR PROFESSIONAL BAGUA MAP

Don't you wish there was a road map to happiness? A set of rules you could just follow to make your life more happy, successful and free?

Such road map exists and it was created by Feng Shui masters thousands of years ago. It is called the Feng Shui Bagua Map and it holds the key to the actions to take and what type of energy to promote in each area of life.

The Feng Shui Bagua Map is so powerful that one Chinese Dynasty made it illegal for anyone but members of the ruling class to use it. This made Feng Shui so popular that the next dynasty tried a different approach: they hired Feng Shui masters to produce fake Feng Shui books and scramble the information of the Bagua Map. These books were widely distributed among the population, and account for much of the misinformation you find on Feng Shui today! If you ever thought Feng Shui was confusing or that there were lots of contradictions, now you know why.

Our Feng Shui Bagua Map is unique in its content and the information provided has passed a very strict scrutiny to ensure that all the information in it is correct.

The Feng Shui BaGua map is a tool used in Feng Shui to map a floorplan in order to determine the location of the 9 Life Areas. The space is divided into 9 squares or rectangles (similar to a tic-tac-toe figure).

The Free Bagua Map you got today is a really good tool to get started in your study of Feng Shui.

When you are ready, check out the Professional Feng Shui Bagua Map, the one Moni Castaneda developed and uses in consultations.

Feng Shui for Us™

End the Feng Shui Confusion!

What is Feng Shui?

In the Chinese language, the words Feng Shui mean literally “wind” and “water” – the forces that shape the world.

Feng Shui, the Art of Placement, proposes arranging the space in order to reproduce the signs of nature that we recognize as life-nurturing and safe. This provides us with positive feedback about our lives. Feng Shui makes sense, because a lot of its advice stems from common sense. Additionally, it is based on the same principles as Traditional Chinese Medicine, Asian Martial Arts and Oriental Philosophy.

The old Chinese masters identified 9 Life Areas that need to be tended to for people to be Happy, Healthy, Prosperous and Free:

1. Career, Life Mission and Individuality
2. Marriage, Relationships and Partnerships
3. Health, Family and Community
4. Wealth, Prosperity and Self Worth
5. Center of Good Fortune and Gratitude
6. Spirituality, Helpful People and Travel
7. Children, Creativity and Fun
8. Wisdom, Self Knowledge and Rest
9. Fame, Reputation and Social Life

Why is Feng Shui so Important?

A person's closest environments – their home and their personal office – provide a great deal of information about their beliefs, values and habits. Just as when we walk into a person's place we form an impression of them, every time we return to our home or workplace we make an impression about ourselves. The space gives us constant feedback on how we are doing in the different areas of life.

Feng Shui for Us™

End the Feng Shui Confusion!

Since our space provides us and those around us with information about our lives, we want that information to be accurate. Is our place reflecting who we are and who we want to be? If not, our environment may be hindering instead of supporting our purposes.

What can Feng Shui Do for Us?

Arranging our space so that it reflects the signs of Life Thriving (Good Feng Shui) gives us good feedback. Bad Feng Shui (going against nature) is like being under the care of a suppressive parent, who constantly tells you, "You are not good enough" or "You can do nothing right." On the other hand, good Feng Shui is like a supportive parent who tells you "Well done!" and "Great work!" and "I love you." Which would be more conducive to creating Health, Wealth, Happiness and Love in your life? The answer is obvious.

Creating a Supportive Environment

There are three main factors in creating a supportive environment: safety, control and simplicity.

Safety: Any piece of furniture or feature in our homes that has sharp edges, is unstable or in any way poses the potential for accidents is considered by the unconscious mind as an imminent source of danger. Something similar happens with exposed drains and uncovered toilet seats, which remind us of potential losses. If we do not handle these issues, part of our mental energy will be engaged in "being wary" of them.

Control: People are more productive and feel more at ease when they enjoy a full view of the place in which they work, cook, rest, etc. If we work with our back to the door we will often be turning our heads to see what's going on or trying to guess what happens "behind our backs" by the noises and smells we perceive. Turning the furniture around so that we can see the door (without being right in front of it) will give us a much greater sense of control. If this is not possible, we can place a mirror in a position that will allow us to see the entrance while we work.

Simplicity: An excess of stuff clutters not only our space but also our minds and our hearts. Being able to let go of the past and of that which we no longer need is a very positive attitude. Clutter is at its worst when it is found in circulation areas, as it blocks the passage not only of people and pets, but also of the Life energy, which the Chinese call chi. Keep only those objects that you love and use.

Next time you come home, see it through the eyes of a stranger. What does it say? Are you happy with what it's telling you? If you aren't, you can do something about it. Feng Shui can help.
